Research introduction

We are a small research team from The University of Auckland. Most of us whakapapa Māori. All of us are committed to doing research that improves the lives of rangatahi Māori. Our team includes experienced Kaupapa Māori researchers, as well as creative and technical experts. First, thank you for considering taking part in our project and showing interest. We will now share some information with you about the project to ensure you understand what we are trying to do and what to expect.

With this study we are seeking to learn more about how rangatahi keep well emotionally, what keeps you strong and connected during the ups and downs of life. We will do this in a spoken word poetry wananga. We hope this creativity will you share your insights in ways that are fun and interesting. These insights will help us to design programmes and interventions that rangatahi Māori find helpful and that they actually want to do.

We want to emphasise that participation in this research is voluntary. As such, you can decline or pull-out of this project at any time without giving reason.

What this study involves

First, we will find out if you are eligible by confirming that you are:

- Māori
- Aged 16-24 years
- Live in either Tamaki/Auckland region OR live in Te Tai Tokerau/Northland region
- Are not emotionally distressed right now. We want to make sure that you are able to participate fully in the wananga.

If you meet these criteria, we will then show you some videos about what participation means and make sure you are fully informed about how we will protect your privacy and rights.

Then we will ask if you consent to participate in the study by completing an online form.

You can say yes, no, or email us to ask any other questions if you are not sure. If you agree to participate, we will need some contact details, like an email and a cell phone number to let you know the date, time and venue for the wananga.

We have partnered with ActionEd (www.actioneducation.co.nz) to deliver two spoken word poetry wānanga. At your wananga, the ActionEd team will run workshops to teach you how to write and perform spoken word poetry. Then you'll have time and space to work on creating a piece of your own about what makes you feel valued and cared for, and what helps you manage tough times. There will also be opportunities to participate in one-on-one interviews to camera if this is something you would like to do.

At the end of the day, there will also be time for you to share your work with the other rangatahi at the wananga. After this, we'll hold a group discussion about everyone's experience of one another's work.

By the end of the wananga you and other rangatahi will have helped us to develop, co-created, a new strategy to support rangatahi Māori and you will be given a $100 prezzy card as koha.

What we'll record and capture

We will have a professional photographer and videographer at the wananga to capture candid moments. You will have the opportunity to consent to having your image captured (photo or video) or not. Anything captured will be use by the research team only. There is no risk of pictures or clips of you just appearing online. If the research team would like to share anything where you are identifiable, we will still seek further specific consent first.

We will audio-record the group discussion where you and others will share their ideas, thoughts and wisdom. These will be stored securely for the researchers to listen deeply to your thoughts and advice.

We will also invite you to the final wananga (sometime in 2027) where we will share the information that we have gathered from the wānanga. We want to ensure that we have heard your advice and want you to see how it has influenced our mahi. You will have a chance to give us feedback and influence our final reports. We will give you another $50 prezzy card as koha.

Potential benefits & risks

You will receive a free one-day wānanga in which you will learn how to write and perform spoken word poetry, led by ActionEd (www.actioneducation.co.nz).

The results of this study will be used to benefit rangatahi across Aotearoa. We want to know from rangatahi like you, what helps (and what doesn't help) you navigate the ups and downs that are part of life. If you choose to participate in this study, you will be contributing your voice to inform how we could go about supporting young people in Aotearoa.

If you choose to participate in this study, you will receive a $100 prezzy card after the wananga to acknowledge your contributions.

We do not anticipate any risks from participating in this research. However, should you find yourself experiencing distress of any kind, we have provided a list of places you can reach out to for help. You can also contact the us, the research team to help you find support.

Also, please note that in the unlikely case that you share anything at the hui that indicates to us that you are at risk of immediate harm to yourself, others or property, we do have an ethical responsibility to ensure you and all parties are safe; we will help you get the support you need.

Your rights as a participant

Participation in this research is voluntary. This means that you have the right to withdraw from participation at any time without providing a reason. You may also withdraw your personal data up within a month following your wānanga without providing a reason. We cannot offer this for contributions made to group discussion. Should you choose to withdraw at any point you may also keep any koha you may have received.

Confidentiality

The research team will always uphold your confidentiality. All data will be de-identified. As part of the consent process you will have the opportunity to indicate whether you consent to your photo and/or video being captured. No identifiable information will be published without your express consent; this means that if you consent to being recorded on the day, the research team will contact you again to see specific permission if they would like to publish any portion of that recording.

As this is a wananga, there will be tikanga regarding confidentiality and respecting each other's privacy. We will ask that you do not share other participants names and contributions without their permission.

Intellectual property & data management

Any individual mahi toi/creative work that you create is yours. You are free take these home and share these as you choose – so long as other rangatahi are not identifiable.

We may record/photograph these mahi toi as part of our research. You may choose to be anonymous or have your name associated with any works. If we choose to publish any aspect of your mahi toi/creative work, we will ask your permission beforehand. As part of the consent form, you have the option to choose if the research team may contact you to ask consent to use your mahi toi/creative works.

How your data will be handled

All data (photos, audio-recordings and video-recordings) and any digital personal information you share with us will be stored securely on the University research server and will only be accessible to members of the research team named on this information sheet.

Any physical notes or written material collected about you during the wananga will be stored in a locked filing cabinet accessible only by members of the research team named on this information sheet. Whatever you provide us will be kept on the university servers for six years, and then it will be deleted or destroyed.

What will happen after the study

As part of the consent process, you will have the opportunity to indicate if you would like to receive a summary of the research findings.

The results of this study will be based on your reflections and your responses to the wellbeing questions. We will analyse these and then write up a report for the funders of this study as well as write research articles for wider publication.

What happens now

You can download a copy of this Participant Information Sheet should you wish to discuss this further with your whānau. You can also ask any questions you may have by sending an email to the research team via our website: www.ngapiki.co.nz
